

Online Training Series

“The diversity of learners”

The 1st session

What types of learners do you have in your class? Some like group work and some like individual work, some like to learn in a lively atmosphere and some like quiet environment, some can understand the teacher’s instructions immediately and some take time to understand... there are probably many different types. Today, the world demands respect for diversity, and this is being realized in various aspects. What should we think about in order to respect the diversity of learners in our daily classes.

In FY2022, The Japan Foundation, Mexico implements an online training series “The diversity of learners”. You may attend just one session, so please join us for the session you are interested in.

◆Theme & Instructor

“Universal Design for Learning(UDL):
Introduction”

Mr. Tomomichi Kawamata

(Associate professor of Graduate School of Education, HOKKAIDO UNIVERSITY OF EDUCATION)

What should teachers consider in order to enable all learners to learn equally and independently, regardless of whether they have physical disabilities or not, and regardless of their learning strategies? Let’s learn about the introduction of UDL (Universal Design for Learning) to get hints of it.
